

Creativity in the educational system of XXI century

Unknown words: Soloist, nativity, bearings, frankincense, myrrh.

Over the last years the concept of creativity has been lost in most of schools. According to the author this happen because creativity is not being treated as other subjects, he says that the creativity should be teach in the same way the maths or literature are taught. Moreover, the educational system is out of creativity because the subjects that foster the creativity are the less important, i.e. music or arts. In the daily life, the people have the chance to be creative but they are afraid of committing mistakes because they will be stigmatized if they are wrong, according to the author this behaviour let the humanity out of creativity. The author also shows experiences and situations that would have been different without creativity.

In summary, the system must foster the creativity because with the help of it we will be creating original ideas that have value.

I agree with most of the arguments exposed by the author because it is true that because of the stigmatization when we are wrong we run out of self-confidence and creativity. I found a lot of facts in the article very interesting for example how the people have different ways to learn -logical and artistic- and how being wrong give you a goal to improve and be more creative.

References

Robinson, K. Do schools kill creativity? Ted talks. Available at:
<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=iG9CE55wbtY&list=PL70DEC2B0568B5469>